Xanadu KINK

The History of Afternoon Tea

Understanding the Roots of Ritual, Refinement, and Global Influence

Tea has traveled across continents and centuries, transforming from a medicinal herb to one of the world's most beloved rituals. To appreciate Afternoon T.E.A.S.e as an act of service and elegance, it helps to understand where the tradition began—and how it evolved into the refined social custom we know today.

Tea in Ancient China

Early Use (2700 BCE – 3rd Century CE)

According to Chinese legend, tea was discovered around 2700 BCE when leaves from a wild tea tree drifted into a pot of boiling water.

In its earliest use, tea was:

- A medicinal drink
- Prepared by boiling leaves in water
- Valued for its healing, cooling, and energizing properties

From Medicine to Daily Drink (3rd Century CE onward)

By the 3rd century, tea cultivation and processing techniques began to develop. As tea became easier to produce, it shifted from a medicinal remedy to a daily beverage enjoyed by the public.

The Tang Dynasty (618–906 CE)

The Tang Dynasty is considered the golden age of early tea culture. During this time:

- Tea became China's national drink
- Tea houses flourished
- Poetry, art, and literature celebrated the beauty of tea
- Early forms of tea ceremonies emerged

The Spread to Japan

Buddhist monks introduced Chinese tea to Japan, where it eventually developed into the formalized Japanese Tea Ceremony. A ritual emphasizing presence, harmony, and respect.

Tea Begins Its Global Journey

Tea arrived in Europe in 1570, carried along dangerous, months-long trade routes from Asia. At that time, tea was:

- Astoundingly rare
- Expensive beyond imagination
- Reserved for royalty, nobles, and the ultra-wealthy

If someone in Europe tasted tea in the late 1500s, they were among the most privileged people in the world.

Tea was served in tiny amounts, presented in delicate miniature cups, offering only the smallest sip of this treasured import.

Why the Pinkie Stuck Out

Those early European teacups were tiny bowls with no handles. To balance the cup:

- Drinkers often extended a finger for support
- This extended pinkie later became associated with “fancy” tea drinking even though it was originally just practical

But as global trade expanded:

- Tea became more available
- Cups grew larger
- Tea storage improved
- The drink became more accessible beyond the nobility

The Birth of the Teacup Handle

In the region now known as Germany, the Saxons solved a major problem: Larger cups filled with hot tea were too hot to hold without burning one's fingers.

Their invention? The modern teacup handle.

Once the handle became standard:

- The pinkie was no longer needed for balance
- Proper tea etiquette shifted
- The “pinkie out” gesture vanished

To this day, we do not extend the pinkie—whether at afternoon tea or during formal dining.

Tea in the Americas

Tea arrived in the Americas with the Dutch in the 17th century and quickly became a symbol of refinement in wealthy households. From colonial salons to elegant parlors, tea became part of social gatherings, hospitality rituals, and cultural identity.

Reflection: From Ancient Leaf to Elegant Ritual

Tea began as a medicinal herb, crossed oceans as a rare luxury, and transformed into a global tradition of refinement and connection.

Pause and reflect:

- What surprised you about tea's journey?
- How does knowing this history shift the way you view tea service today?
- Why do you think tea became such an important part of social and ceremonial culture?

(Use the space below for notes.)

From Delicacy to Daily Ritual

With this history in mind, we can better appreciate how tea evolved into the social, elegant, and sensory experience we now call Afternoon Tea and how your own Afternoon T.E.A.S.e service continues that lineage of care and artistry.

Up next, we'll explore how Afternoon Tea grew into the luxurious, ritualized experience embraced around the world today.

The Rise of Afternoon Tea

From Necessity to Luxury, From Snack to Social Ritual

While tea had already crossed continents and cultures, Afternoon Tea as we recognize it today was born from a very specific moment in British history. What began as a practical solution to hunger transformed into one of the most elegant, celebrated, and beloved social traditions around the world.

The Birth of Afternoon Tea (1840s England)

The ritual of Afternoon Tea is widely credited to Anna Russell, the 7th Duchess of Bedford, in the early 1840s.

At that time:

- Breakfast was served early
- Dinner was served extremely late (often after 8 p.m.)
- There was a long, tiring stretch in the middle of the day

The Duchess frequently found herself hungry in the late afternoon. Her solution?

- A tray of tea,
- A light snack of bread, butter, and small cakes,
- Served privately in her boudoir.

What began as a personal comfort quickly became a fashionable social event. She soon invited friends to join her and the aristocracy eagerly followed.

Afternoon Tea was born.

Expansion Into High Society Ritual

As the ritual spread, Afternoon Tea evolved from a simple snack into a showcase of refinement. Over time, it grew to include:

- Fine Linens & China
- Elegant tablecloths
- Embroidered napkins
- Delicate teacups
- Full silver tea services

A Structured Menu

The classic three-tiered stand emerged, featuring:

- Savories (finger sandwiches)
- Scones with clotted cream and jam
- Sweets (small cakes, pastries, and confections)

Etiquette & Manners

Rules around posture, conversation, order of service, and proper handling of tea ware gave the ritual its graceful, polished feel.

Fashion & Social Display

Afternoon Tea became an opportunity to:

- Dress elegantly
- Socialize with peers
- Demonstrate refinement
- Strengthen social bonds

By the late 19th century, it was the epitome of genteel leisure.

High Tea vs. Afternoon Tea

Understanding the Proper Terminology & Avoiding Common Etiquette Mistakes

High Tea vs. Afternoon Tea

A common misconception is that “High Tea” is more formal. Historically:

- Afternoon Tea = luxury, leisure, elegance (upper class)
- High Tea = hearty early-evening meal (working class)

High Tea was eaten at a high dining table and included meat pies, bread, cheese, and strong tea, more supper than social ritual.

Afternoon Tea remained the refined, graceful custom associated with wealth, etiquette, and entertainment.

Spread Across the British Empire and Beyond

As British cultural influence expanded in the 19th and 20th centuries, Afternoon Tea traveled with it. In many regions, it took on local flavors:

- India: Chai-infused sweets, spice-driven snacks
- Hong Kong: Milk tea culture and cha chaan teng cafés
- Australia & New Zealand: Strong influence from British tearooms
- Africa & the Caribbean: Tea paired with local pastries and tropical flavors

Wherever tea went, the ritual adapted—blending elegance with regional identity.

Afternoon Tea in Modern Times

Today, Afternoon Tea continues to be celebrated worldwide, evolving into:

- Luxury hotels host elaborate tea events featuring seasonal menus, live music, and curated tea lists.
- Afternoon Tea is now a staple for bridal parties, birthdays, ladies’ luncheons, and society gatherings.
- From Alice-in-Wonderland themes to modern fusion menus, Afternoon Tea remains a canvas for creativity.

For those in the lifestyle, tea becomes:

- A ritual of service
- A moment of devotion
- A sensory experience
- A way to practice grace, poise, and precision

The Afternoon T.E.A.S.e workshop continues this lineage honoring tradition while embracing intentional modern connection.

Reflection: Tea as a Moment of Connection

Consider how Afternoon Tea evolved from a private snack to a luxurious global ritual.

Ask yourself:

- What elements of traditional Afternoon Tea resonate with you the most?
- How do these historical touches enhance service, presence, or atmosphere?
- How might these traditions influence your own Afternoon T.E.A.S.e service?

(Use the space below.)

Royal Afternoon Tea

House of Xanadu offers

Royal Afternoon Tea builds upon the traditional Afternoon Tea experience and adds a refined layer of luxury, elegance, and celebration. While it includes all the classic elements of Afternoon Tea, several distinct features set it apart and create a more elevated experience.

Menu:

Royal Afternoon Tea includes everything found in a traditional Afternoon Tea—

- Finger sandwiches
- Scones (served with clotted cream and jam)
- Pastries and sweets

All three tiers remain, but ingredients and presentation may be more elevated, seasonal, or gourmet.

Setting:

Royal Afternoon Tea is typically served in a more formal, elegant environment. This may include finer linens, premium tableware, enhanced décor, or a more ceremonial style of service. The atmosphere is intentionally luxurious and polished.

Beverages:

One of the signature elements of Royal Afternoon Tea is the inclusion of a glass of sparkling wine. This may be:

- Champagne
- Prosecco
- A sparkling rosé or other celebratory beverage
- House of Xanadu signature drink Cherry Royale

This addition transforms the tea into a more festive, indulgent occasion.

In essence:

Royal Afternoon Tea takes the timeless ritual of Afternoon Tea and elevates it by adding sparkling wine and heightened refinement—creating an experience that feels celebratory, indulgent, and truly special.

Afternoon Tea Dress Code

Afternoon Tea began as a social ritual enjoyed primarily by women of high society, but today it is embraced by people of all genders and backgrounds. One thing, however, has remained consistent: when attending “tea”, as the Queen herself simply calls it—it is important to dress appropriately for the occasion.

The standard dress code for Afternoon Tea is smart casual. This means presenting yourself in a polished and put-together way without crossing into overly formal attire unless the venue specifically requires it. If you’re attending a Kinky affair with your leather family, your leather attire is also appropriate (Always check with your host).

General Guidelines

- Smart Casual is the most common expectation for Afternoon Tea.
- Avoid: jeans (unless the venue explicitly says otherwise), sneakers, athletic wear, flip-flops, shorts, and overly casual fabrics.
- Check the Venue: Some upscale establishments, such as The Ritz London, maintain stricter dress codes. Men may be required to wear jackets and ties, and overall attire may need to be more formal.
- Respect the Setting: The goal is always to mirror the care, elegance, and effort of the event and the host.

For Men

- Smart Casual Attire:
 - A collared shirt (button-down or polo).
 - Trousers (called “pants” in the U.S. and “trousers” in the U.K.) made of a more formal fabric such as cotton, linen, or khaki.
 - Avoid denim unless permitted by the venue.
- Shoes: Loafers or other smart dress shoes.
- Optional Enhancements:
 - A blazer or sport coat.
 - A tie or pocket square if the tea is more formal or held in an upscale venue.

For Women

- Smart Casual Attire:
 - Dresses, skirts with blouses, or tailored pants with a polished top.
- Shoes: Flats, heels, wedges, or dressy sandals.
- Outer Layers:
 - A cardigan, light wrap, or jacket if desired.
- Length Tips:
 - A dress just above or below the knee, or a classic tea-length dress, is always a lovely choice.
 - Maxi dresses can work if styled appropriately and in line with the venue's atmosphere.

A Note on Hats and Gloves

While hats and gloves are often associated with tea in movies and television, they are not commonly worn at Afternoon Tea in England or the United States today. Wearing gloves can make eating difficult, and hats, unless the event specifically calls for them may signal that you're a tourist.

That said, you do you. If the setting or theme invites a little flourish, embrace it with confidence.

Elegant Touches

- Consider a tea-length dress, a refined maxi dress, or a tailored jacket to elevate your look.
- Accessories should be understated and elegant rather than overly formal.

Know Your Venue's Expectations

Always verify the dress code ahead of time. Many country clubs, hotels, and event spaces list attire requirements on their website, or you may contact the host or venue directly for clarification.

For example, at our events, the dress code for Afternoon Tea is smart casual, though server attire may vary depending on the venue. Sometimes with an elegant kinky twist if we're hosting at a Kink event, and more traditional if held in a vanilla setting.

Guests who attended our Spring High Protocol Dinner may remember the black-tie/leather dress code, which reflects how different events carry different expectations

Why Dress Code Matters

Showing up underdressed can unintentionally signal a lack of respect for the host, the space, or the event itself. Etiquette, at its heart, is about respect, kindness, and consideration, for the host, the other guests, and the environment you're entering.

When a host has taken the time to create a beautiful Afternoon Tea, it is thoughtful to reflect that effort through your appearance.

Final Thought

Look your best, dress your best, and enjoy the experience. Presenting yourself with care not only honors the tradition of Afternoon Tea but also enhances the elegance and enjoyment of the moment for everyone involved.

Invitation & RSVP

The Invitation

Afternoon Tea often begin with an invitation. This may be verbal, digital, or printed, but it always includes key details:

- Who is hosting
- Event date and time
- Location and arrival expectations
- Dress code
- RSVP deadline
- Special instructions (e.g., protocol level, service roles, silence zones)

RSVP

What is the biggest etiquette mistake guests make? They don't RSVP.

RSVPs are one of the simplest yet most meaningful ways to demonstrate respect, courtesy, and refinement. Whether the event is casual, formal, or a full High Protocol affair, your response communicates reliability and regard for the host's effort.

Use the following guidelines to ensure your RSVP reflects grace, clarity, and good manners:

- Always Respond
Never leave an invitation unanswered. Even if you cannot attend, acknowledging the invitation shows respect for the host.
- Respond Promptly
Aim to reply as soon as possible—ideally within 24–48 hours. Quick responses support the host's planning and demonstrate consideration.
- Inform Promptly if Plans Change
If circumstances shift, notify the host immediately. Delayed updates create unnecessary stress and may impact seating, preparation, or service.
- Provide All Requested Information
If the host asks for meal choices, accessibility needs, pronouns, or protocol-specific details, include everything in your response to avoid back-and-forth messages.
- Personalize Your Response
A warm, polite note elevates even the briefest RSVP. Acknowledge the invitation, express appreciation, and clarify your attendance.
- Communicate Delays
If you cannot respond right away, let the host know you're reviewing your schedule and will get back to them.

Sample RSVP Messages:

Accepting an Invitation (Formal)

Subject: RSVP – Afternoon Royal Tea with House of Xanadu

Dear TheGirl_Star,

I humbly accept your gracious invitation to the Royal Tea Party scheduled for Saturday, June 21st at 2:00 PM. I will attend in appropriate Royal Tea attire and am honored to represent the House of Crimson Rose.

I have no dietary restrictions at this time.

Proper Tea Etiquette

Afternoon Tea is a graceful ritual rooted in refinement, mindfulness, and small but meaningful details. Each gesture from how you lift your cup to how you stir your tea contributes to the overall elegance of the experience. Below is a guide to help you navigate proper tea etiquette with poise and confidence.

Handling Your Teacup and Saucer

Do:

- Hold the teacup only by the handle.
- Keep the saucer on the table when seated.
- Lift both cup and saucer when standing (held at waist level).
- Take small sips and return the cup to its saucer between sips.

Don't:

- Do not raise your pinkie.
- Do not drink with the spoon in the cup.

Stirring Your Tea Correctly

Many people mistakenly stir in a full circle, creating clinking noises and unnecessary splashing. Instead:

Correct Method:

- Stir gently between 6 and 12 o'clock, back and forth—not in a circle.
- Place the spoon behind your teacup at a diagonal angle when finished.

Diagram:

Why this matters:

- Prevents spills
- Prevents noise
- Dissolves sugar more evenly
- Looks polished and refined

Never:

- Tap your spoon on the cup (risk of cracks & noise)
- Leave your spoon in the cup

Teabags (If Used)

Though a formal tea will not use teabags, it is etiquette you should still know:

- Remove teabag before drinking.
- Gently press the bag against the side of the cup using the string (never wrap the string around the spoon).
- Discard into a secondary saucer or small plate—never onto the table.

Adding Milk: Before or After?

This is a centuries-old debate—one with passionate opinions on both sides.

Both are acceptable.

Choose based on preference and tradition.

- Milk First: Historical; protects fine China; smooth mixing.
- Milk After: Practical; easier to judge the strength and color of tea.

There is no wrong choice.

Drinking Tea

- Take small, quiet sips.
- Do not blow on hot tea; allow it to cool naturally.
- Keep your pinky down—the raised finger is a myth, not etiquette.

The Great Scone Debate: Devonshire or Cornish?

Even in the UK, this is a lively (and charming) disagreement:

- Devonshire Method (Clotted Cream First)
Clotted Cream acts like butter—spread it first, then add jam.
This is how the Royal Family traditionally enjoys their scones.
- Cornish Method (Jam First)
Spread jam first for a cleaner base, then add a dollop of clotted cream.
Jam spreads more easily when applied first.

FYI: Clotted Cream is a thick, rich dairy product made by slowly heating whole milk and then allowing the cream that rises to the top to thicken, or "clot. After cooling, the clotted cream is skimmed from the top and has a mildly sweet, nutty flavor, falling in richness between whipped cream and butter.

Both are acceptable—choose the one you prefer.

Eating a Scone Properly

- Break scone in half with your fingers—not a knife. Treat it like an English muffin.
- Place a small amount of jam & cream on your plate first.
- Add to each bite-sized portion individually.
- Never dunk a scone in your tea.
- Pronunciation varies: scone (rhymes with “cone” or “gone”).

Food Etiquette

- Take small bites.
- Chew fully before sipping tea.
- Use a fork for messy foods.
- Never use serving spoons to spread onto your own scone.
(Place items on your plate first.)

Napkin Etiquette

- Wait for the Master/host to lift their napkin first before touching yours.
- Open your napkin, fold it in half, and place it across your lap.
- Dab, don't wipe—keeping any stains inside the fold.
- When finished, place your napkin to the left of your place setting.

Pouring Tea

- Hold the teapot by the handle, supporting the lid gently with two fingers.
- Pour slowly and steadily.
- Do not overfill—leave room for milk, if desired.

High Protocol Tea Rituals

High Protocol Tea Rituals transform a simple serving act into an intentional expression of devotion, control, presence, and power. Each movement becomes a gesture of respect. Each phrase becomes an offering. Each moment reinforces the dynamic.

I. Submissive Service Elements

Posture & Presence

- Submissive begins in a waiting kneel or high kneel near the tea station.
- Head bowed; palms up or resting softly on thighs.
- When addressed, submissive rises gracefully with eyes lowered unless eye contact is permitted.
- Movements remain intentional, fluid, quiet—every gesture is a gift.
- Breath, posture, and energy should communicate calm obedience and readiness.

Presentation of Tea

- Tray (cup, saucer, teapot, cream, sugar, napkin) is held with both hands, elbows tucked for stability and humility.
- The tray is offered from a kneeling position or raised to a table based on the protocol level.
- The submissive may offer a ritual phrase such as:
 - “Your tea, my Lord/Lady, offered with devotion.”
 - “I bring this service with steady hands and an open heart.”

Ritual Pouring

- Submissive asks permission before pouring:
 - “May I pour for you, my Lord/Lady?”
- Upon consent, the submissive may rise or remain kneeling depending on the dynamic’s established protocol.
- Pouring is slow, deliberate, controlled.
- Offer additions using ritualized phrasing:
 - “Would you prefer sweetness or simplicity today?”
 - “Shall I soften the strength, or serve it bold as brewed?”
 - “How may I perfect your cup, my Lord/Lady?”

Each movement should reflect devotion and the desire to anticipate the Dominant’s needs.

II. Language of Service

Ritualized language elevates the tea service from polite to sacred. Tone should be soft, reverent, and steady.

Examples:

- “With each pour, I honor your presence.”
- “May this tea reflect my devotion and your grace.”
- “Your comfort is my calling; your satisfaction, my purpose.”
- “I serve as you deem worthy.”

Use language that reinforces hierarchy, intention, and the emotional texture of the dynamic.

III. Dominant Role & Presence

The Dominant’s presence anchors the ritual.

The Dominant may:

- Receive the service silently, allowing the submissive’s actions to speak for themselves.
- Offer affirming, grounding phrases such as:
 - “Your grace pleases me.”
 - “I accept your offering.”
 - “Continue.”

Optional symbolic gesture:

- The Dominant lifts the cup slightly—a subtle toast acknowledging the submissive’s devotion.

IV. Gratitude & Acknowledgement

After service, the Dominant may offer appreciation in a formalized way:

Dominant Acknowledgements:

- A nod
- A touch to the cheek, chin, or hair
- A soft command: “Rise.”
- A phrase: “Your service has been noted.”

Submissive Responses:

- “Thank you for allowing me to serve.”
- “Your satisfaction is my greatest reward.”
- “Your acknowledgement honors me.”

This exchange seals the ritual and reinforces the dynamic.

Optional Enhancements (Advanced Protocol Layering)

To deepen the sensory and ceremonial experience:

Atmospheric Elements

- Music: soft classical, harp, low-tempo ambient, or kink-themed instrumentals.
- Lighting: candles, warm tones, or spotlighting on the tea service area.

Presentation & Props

- Silver or vintage tea service
- Embroidered or monogrammed linens
- Designated tea tray for High Protocol use only

Dress Code

- Submissives: lace, sheer fabrics, formal corsets, uniform-style garments, or dress code colors (white, blush, black).
- Dominants: formal wear, leather, tailored suits, or event-specific attire.

Protocol Enhancements

- Use of titles and honorifics throughout the ritual
- Required permission for every transition (rise, pour, add sugar, present cup)
- Gesture choreography (bows, pauses, eye-lowering cues)

High Protocol Adaptive Rules

Grace, intention, and reverence are always possible; no matter the body delivering the service.

High Protocol is not rigid; it is intentional. It should be inclusive and adaptive without ever losing the heart of the ritual. Older submissives and those with physical limitations can still embody exquisite presence, devotion, and structure simply with alternative postures and adapted movement.

What matters most is Posture & Presence, not the shape the body takes.

Posture & Presence (Adapted for Seated or Standing Service)

Seated Gracefully in Service

- Use a designated service chair—elegant, stable, preferably armless to allow free movement.
- Sit upright with a long spine, shoulders relaxed and open.
- Feet flat on the floor or crossed at the ankles if appropriate.
- Hands may rest:
 - Palms-up on thighs, symbolizing offering, or
 - One hand over the heart and one on the lap for a moment of stillness before service begins.
- Presence should communicate readiness, serenity, and devotion.

Standing With Intention

- Stand tall with a gentle downward gaze unless eye contact is allowed.
- Arms may rest:
 - Softly folded in front,
 - Behind the back in a respectful hold, or
 - At the sides with relaxed, intentional energy.
- Movements are slow, fluid, and deliberate-intention over effort.
- When turning or repositioning, pivot with grace, imagining the body moving through warm water.

Tray Presentation (Seated or Standing)

If seated:

- Present the tray from your lap or a side table, lifting with both hands.
- Offer with a phrase such as:
“Your tea, with care and reverence.”

If standing:

- Hold the tray at chest height with both hands, elbows slightly tucked.
- Offer with a soft head bow or a small forward lean of the upper body.
- Maintain control, stillness, and focus.

Respectful Eye Contact

- Follow the dynamic’s standard rules:
 - Averted eyes: look softly toward the floor or just below the Dominant’s chin.
 - Allowed eye contact: keep the gaze gentle, present, and reverent.
- Even modified eye contact can carry profound meaning when paired with breath and posture.

Ritual Transition Gestures

Small gestures replace kneeling transitions and retain ritual weight:

- A hand over the heart
- A slow, respectful nod
- A deliberate inhale and exhale
- A gentle bow of the head
- A moment of stillness before movement

These micro-rituals communicate readiness, humility, and presence.

After service:

- Return to the chair or station slowly and with reverence.
- Optional closing phrases:
 - “Thank you for receiving my service.”
 - “May this offering bring you peace and pleasure.”

✨ Accessibility Is Not a Compromise—It’s an Enhancement

Inclusive High Protocol is not less—it is more intentional, more thoughtful, and more aligned with the spirit of service.

True High Protocol honors:

- Presence
- Awareness
- Ritual
- Devotion
- Respect

Whether kneeling, seated, or standing, a submissive can create a deeply meaningful, elegant, and powerful ritual—one that reflects both their dynamic and their body’s truth.
